BASIC GAS DRILLING AND PIPELINE INFRASTRUCTURE NUMBERS

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) had created an “Eyes on Drilling” tipline for citizens to report non-emergency, suspicious activity related to oil and natural gas development in early 2010 (1-877-919-4EPA or online at eyesondrilling@epa.gov). Because of overwhelming calls from the public, according to a Freedom of Information Act Request by Greenwire, the EPA discontinued the hotline in 2011 and is requesting individuals use the general reporting system or the national or regional state phone numbers if pollution events are suspected. In all, according to the Akron Beacon Journal, EPA received more than 500 tips through the toll-free gas drilling tip line, with a related email address attracting hundreds more. None resulted in federal criminal cases.

Gas Pipeline Enforcement Numbers & Reporting Websites

Utility companies add the chemical odorant "mercaptan" to natural gas distribution lines to help detect gas leaks (smells like rotten eggs). Interstate and Intrastate Transmission lines DO NOT have mercaptan additive so a transmission line leak WILL NOT be detected by smell. You may hear an unusual hissing or roaring sound, see dead or discolored vegetation, pooled liquid or a cloud of vapor or mist or bubbles in water if the pipeline is submerged. You may smell an unusual odor, or the scent of petroleum or odorized natural gas. If you suspect a pipeline leak has occurred – leave the area immediately and well away from the line - dial 911. Pipelines are under tremendous pressure and can EXPLODE.
